WHAT CUSTOMERS SAY

> "I've had great results with papaya enzymes after meals. They're much cheaper than something like Arrae, and taste kinda good too."
> https://www.reddit.com/r/NYCinfluencersnark/comments/140aw2d/ · Reddit (verbatim snippet)

> "A shipment kept arriving after they had cancelled (reviewer summary, not verbatim)."
> https://uk.trustpilot.com/review/arrae.com?page=6 · Trustpilot, paraphrase via search; TrustScore ~1.5-2/5 on ~150 reviews; brand does not invite reviews

> "Bloat capsules help with post-meal discomfort; Sleep and Calm less effective (summary, not verbatim)."

PAINS · DESIRES · OBJECTIONS

- Post-meal bloating / discomfort (the use case reviewers credit Bloat for)
- Subscription cancellation and shipments after cancelling (Trustpilot)
- Feel normal after a big meal
- A fix that works within the evening, not weeks
- Cheaper alternatives (papaya / digestive enzymes)
- Distrust of subscription billing

GAPS WORTH TESTING

1. Subscription trust gap
Own page promises pause/cancel anytime; independent Trustpilot reviews centre on cancellation and post-cancel shipments. Test creative that shows the pause/cancel mechanic (only if true) or a one-time option.

2. Cheap-alternative objection unanswered
Reddit: papaya enzymes 'much cheaper than something like Arrae'. A comparison/mechanism angle can answer 'why not a $10 enzyme' (needs brand-substantiated differences).

3. Lead with the moment, not the category
Reviewers credit Bloat for one moment (after a big meal). Occasion-led creative (dinner out, Thanksgiving week, holidays) is timely for late November.
